Hi,

Please make sure the updates are in English.

On a site where many people with different languages work, it is always better to stick to a standard language.

As the requester requested in English, language won't be a problem for them I guess.
Otherwise it should fine.

Thanks.

Beyond the languaje, what makes me scratch my head is the embargoed destination.
I am not a lawyer, so I will not debate on that. Also I think that a debate about justice is out of place, no matter how wrong thing may be. What it is needed is lawful guidance in this matter.

But Red Hat or Fedora don't export anything? You've just received orders in the ticket system and I, as a volunteer, distribute Fedora in my region.

What if someone from an 'embargoed' destination downloads the images from the Fedora site? Does that count as an indirect export?

  The ticketing system is a gift of Fedora to the global Fedora

If the US plutocracy is that insane, then we can

A) Consider labelling the ticketing system a third party initiative and transfer it to a server in a suitable South American country like Venezuela. 'Third-party ' because it is for Fedora, official, non-official spins and respins.

B)Have one more third party ticketing system

The first option makes more sense apparently and somebody must take the initiative.

In all options above if control is taken away from "official" Fedora.
As Red Had own the "Fedora" brand unfortunately, the ticketing system could no longer use it in any sense.  Just as "CentOS" does not say "Base on Red Hat"

And currently US Govt. could still probably sue the hoster\hosting nations.

I qualify above with
"I am not a Lawyer", nor a US Citizen.
